

Core Training: Community Inclusion and Relationships Supporting Individuals and their Families Reference Guide

Online Resources

- This website provides information about how families of persons with disabilities cope with the changes and situations that may affect them. It highlights information about children with Developmental Disabilities; however, this can be useful when learning about transition services <http://www.oadd.org/publications/journal/issues/vol11no1/download/jones&passey.pdf>
- This website highlights and addresses challenges of aging caregivers and aging people with Developmental Disabilities <http://www.strengthforcaring.com/daily-care/caring-for-someone-with-developmental-disabilities/older-adults-with-developmental-disabilities-and-their-aging-family-caregivers/>
- The National Institute for People with Disabilities, along with YAI Network, has released a Video entitled, “Working with Families: What Professionals Need to Know”. The video and accompanying training materials can be ordered at <http://www.yai.org/resources/trainingstore/> .

Hitting the Books

- This resource manual, consisting of 8 reference chapters can be useful in educating staff on how to support the families of the people that they serve. Also, it gives information in the 'Parenting Styles' section about what to recognize when a person they serve is a parent .
